ABSTRACT

The directory lists 381 programs designed to meet the pre-academic English language training and orientation needs of persons intending to pursue academic study, business or professional work, or training in the United States. The directory does not include programs intended to meet survival needs of refugees and recent immigrants, or remedial English programs for citizens and permanent residents. Information contained in the entries was derived from a 1988 survey of institutions offering the courses and programs. Introductory chapters include: (1) a description of the survey; (2) notes on the use of the directory; and (3) essays about planning for the study of English as a second language (ESL) in the United States, about the standards and plan for self-study for accreditation to the Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL), and about the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs' (NAFSA) program of self-regulation. The directory provides citations in three sections: intensive ESL programs; postsecondary ESL courses; and secondary level ESL courses. Appended materials include the TESOL standards, guidelines for intensive English programs, guidelines for selecting an English language training contractor, and NAFSA principles for international educational exchange. Entries are indexed by sponsoring organization and by the beginning date of the program. (MSE)

INTRODUCTION

James O'Driscoll, Manager, English and Special Services
Institute of International Education

James O'Driscoll is the editor of English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States. As the manager of IIE's Office of English and Special Services, he is responsible for arranging the participation of hundreds of foreign USIA Fulbright grantees and other IIE–related students in intensive preacademic English as a Second Language programs each year. His staff also organizes IIE–administered foreign language teaching assistantship programs, special enrichment programs and a variety of other activities that benefit IIE–related foreign students in the United States.

Since its first appearance in 1964, English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States (ELOPUS) has become the standard reference work for information about intensive English language training and other orientation programs designed to prepare international students for academic study in the United States. The first edition of ELOPUS listed 57 intensive English language programs. The present edition, the ninth, contains entries for 381 programs of intensive English language training or field–of–study or other preacademic orientation. In addition, there are sections which describe 348 English language courses available at institutions of higher education, and ESL programs and/or courses at 48 secondary schools.

Not all organizations offering intensive English instruction are included in this directory. ELOPUS presents a comprehensive listing of programs designed to meet the preacademic training needs of persons intending to pursue academic study in the United States. However, the programs listed often are prepared to meet the needs of other international visitors, business persons, professionals and trainees. ELOPUS does not include programs primarily designed to meet the survival needs of refugees and recent immigrants, or remedial English programs for citizens and permanent residents.

The eighth edition, published in 1984, listed 398 programs. Of the programs with entries in the eighth edition, 94 either informed IIE that they had ceased operation or failed to return a completed questionnaire. Thus, 79 of the entries in the present edition are for programs which have come into existence since 1984.

This publication does not include information about training programs for teachers and administrators of English language programs. Information about the many U.S. academic institutions offering undergraduate and graduate degree and certificate programs in Teaching English as a Foreign/Second Language (TEFL/TESL) is available in a publication of the Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL), Directory of Professional Preparation Programs in TESOL in the United States, 1986–1988, Julia Frank–McNeil, editor. Copies of this directory may be obtained from TESOL Central Office, Suite 205, 1118 22nd Street, NW, Washington, DC 20037

THE SURVEY

The information contained in the entries in the 1988 edition of ELOPUS was provided by the institutions offering the programs and courses in response to a questionnaire mailed in February 1988. The initial mailing was sent to ESL directors. A follow–up mailing was sent foreign student advisers at institutions which had not returned completed questionnaires. Supplementary material was obtained from catalogs and brochures for the various schools and programs and, when necessary, from telephone interviews.

IIE's Office of English and Special Services and Communications Division prepared and sent questionnaires to all institutions and organizations included in the 1984 edition of the directory, to accredited institutions of higher education, members of the National Association of Independent Schools (NAIS), and to other organizations known to offer appropriate activities.

Most sponsoring institutions with program entries in the 1984 edition returned completed questionnaires even when the program was no longer offered. However, not all did so. Listed below are those institutions and organizations which sponsored programs with entries in the 1984 edition but which did not return the questionnaire used to obtain information for this edition.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The editor wishes to thank all those who participated in preparing the ninth edition of English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States:

Ed Battle and the staff of IIE's Communications Division, for their assistance in the preparation and mailing of the survey, the design and production of the directory itself;

Jim Bauer for overseeing computer input and his dogged pursuit of missing data;

Ellen Stern for her patience, persistence, and ingenuity in inputting data using an evolving program;

The staff of the Office of English and Special Services which contributed in many ways to the production of ELOPUS, but also ensured that the regular work of the Office proceeded without a hitch—in particular Bhikshuni Weisbrot, who saw to it that the infinity of paper got into the right bins and stayed there.

I also wish to acknowledge the contributions of all the U.S. Information Agency officers, the overseas advisers and my colleagues at ESL programs across the country and in the various professional organizations who have made suggestions on how the previous editions could be improved in this edition. Without the cooperation of these and many other persons, the ninth edition of ELOPUS would have been impossible. The accuracy and usefulness of the directory depends on their contributions; the errors are mine.

HOW TO USE THIS BOOK

English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States will assist you to identify opportunities to learn English as a Second Language (ESL). This book provides useful basic information on intensive ESL programs and ESL courses at the postsecondary level, and offers a special section on ESL at private secondary schools. To derive maximum benefit, be sure to read How to Use This Book carefully. It explains the organization of entries and the various terms used in the listings.

In addition to consulting this book, international students should seek out the U.S. Information Service (USIS) educational advising centers in their home countries. These centers offer a wide variety of informational resources on U.S. higher education, and their staffs are trained to assist international students in identifying appropriate educational choices.

All ESL programs and courses listed prepare foreign–language speakers for study at U.S. educational institutions. Programs included in this publication may also meet the needs of other participants. In fact, many can provide instruction geared to the needs of individuals preparing for technical training or preparing to practice their profession in an English–speaking environment. However, this book does not include programs designed to meet survival needs of refugees and immigrants, or remedial English programs for citizens and permanent residents, unless such programs are open to international students and are bona fide regularly–scheduled ESL programs that prepare foreign–language speakers for U.S. higher education.

English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States does not include information about training programs for teachers and administrators of English language programs.

IIE tries to make the information contained in this book as accurate and useful as possible. Bear in mind, however, that information–gathering for a reference book begins long before the book is printed, and that English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States is not published every year. For these reasons, it is a good idea to use this book as a general resource for identifying programs and courses of interest. Final and full information on any program or course, particularly in regard to dates and costs, must be obtained directly from the organizational sponsor.

Entries in this book are based on questionnaires completed during the first half of calendar year 1988 by the organizations that sponsor these programs and courses. No attempt has been made to evaluate the programs and courses described in English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States. Inclusion in this book does not imply approval or recommendation by the Institute of International Education, nor does omission imply disapproval.

Information on programs and courses not listed in this edition of English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States is welcome. Please enclose a brochure when you write IIE's Office of English and Special Services (Institute of International Education, 809 United Nations Plaza, New York, NY 10017, U.S.A.) about a new ESL program or course.

SECTION 1: INTENSIVE ENGLISH AS A SECOND LANGUAGE PROGRAMS

Intensive ESL programs are fulltime educational programs offering a minimum of 15 hours of classroom instruction each week. These programs prepare people from other nations for U.S. higher education by providing them with the necessary level of English language proficiency, and by offering them an orientation to U.S. academic life.

The section also contains descriptions of a small number of programs focused on specific academic and professional fields—usually at the graduate level. These programs develop both English language communications skills and skills needed for work and study in a given field in the United States. For example, programs are available that provide an introduction to U.S. business and management and that strengthen the business–related English communications skills of the participants.

Overall Organization of the Program Descriptions

Programs are organized by state. See Map of the United States of America in this book. Within each state, programs are listed alphabetically by the name of sponsor college, university or private organization.

Program Sponsor Name and Address

Each entry begins with a number used to identify the program within the listing sequence and in the indexes at the back of the book. The name of the the sponsoring college, university or private organization is next, followed by the title of the program itself.

If the sponsor organization (the organization which is legally responsible for the program) is an accredited U.S. college or university, the last line of the entry indicates that fact with the symbol (HE). Accreditation is a recognition by impartial evaluating agencies that a college or university meets defined standards for a higher educational institution. IIE used the 1988 Higher Education Directory (Falls Church, VA: Higher Education Publications, Inc.) as a resource in determining accreditation status of colleges and universities in this book.

If the sponsor organization is a private corporation, association or other organization which is not an accredited U.S. college or university, the symbol (HE) does not appear at the end of the listing.

In some cases, a private organization's program is physically located on the campus of an accredited U.S. college or university, but the higher educational institution itself is not the sponsor. In such cases, the address indicates that the program resides on campus in care of (c/o) the higher educational institution, e.g., John Smith English Language Program, c/o John Doe University; and the symbol (HE) does not appear at the foot of the entry.

The program address, telephone, cable, fax and telex information are as provided to IIE in response to the questionnaire for this book. Standard two–letter U.S. Post Office abbreviations are used for state names in all addresses, e.g., AL for Alabama, AK for Alaska, etc. See Map of the United States of America for identification of the two-letter U.S. Post Office state abbreviations.

ESL Programs

All intensive ESL programs are identified by the phrase ESL Program after the address, followed by a table presenting the number of hours per week of required work.

Class is the number of required hours per week of classroom instruction at each level of ESL. Lab is the number of hours per week of language laboratory required. CAI is an abbreviation for Computer-Assisted Instruction.

The levels of English language proficiency used in this book are as follows:

B: Beginning level: student has no knowledge of English;
LI: Low Intermediate level: student has some basic knowledge of English, can understand and be understood with difficulty;
I: Intermediate level: student can understand and read with some ease, makes frequent mistakes in writing and speaking, has control of a limited number of grammatical structures;
A: Advanced level: student has control over most of the structures of English grammar, makes few mistakes although lacks full idiomatic fluency.

In the program descriptions, these terms describe the level of English language proficiency of the entering students for whom a particular program is intended. Programs may further divide participants and offer more finely differentiated levels of instruction.

Information on other aspects of ESL instruction are provided where available, e.g., information on optional activities, at the bottom of the table describing the class and lab offerings.

Orientation and Special Opportunity Programs

Approximately 25 of the over 380 programs in this section have a special focus either on orientation to U.S. academic life or on an academic or professional field. In such cases, the programs are identified by their individual names, rather than as an ESL Program. For example, the University of California at Irvine offers the International Business, Banking and Trade Program for Professionals. Information provided on these programs parallels that provided on ESL programs, except that the table presenting information on hours per week of classroom and language lab instruction does not apply and is not used. A summary line presenting information on classroom hours per week is used instead of the table.

Terms

Provides information on length-in-weeks of program terms, and on the months in which new terms begin. Many sponsors offer programs of several different lengths. Programs frequently begin at several different starting-dates during the year. Terms: lists longest term first, followed in descending order of length by other terms offered. Beginning-dates are sequenced from August, the first month of the academic year, and continue through the annual cycle through July. Months, rather than exact dates, are used as beginning-dates in the entries.

For more information on beginning-dates, see Index 2, which provides guidance as to the beginning-dates of all programs in this section, broken-down to thirds of each month of the year.

Longest Break(s)

It is useful for people coming from other nations to know when the longest break(s) in a program will occur, especially when other housing arrangements must be made during the break(s), as is often the case. Contact individual programs to determine their housing policy during breaks, and for further information as to any other interruptions in programs, e.g., for holidays.

Average Class Size and Program Size

Offers information both on the average size of classes and on the overall size of the entire ESL program at the institution. In some cases, programs have provided figures on program size for both academic year and summer programs, typically where there is a large difference between the academic year enrollment and the summer enrollment.

Faculty

Programs may employ faculty fulltime (F/T) and/or parttime (P/T), and statistics are offered here on numbers of instructors employed in both categories, as well as on the average number of hours per week taught by a fulltime faculty member.

Entries also provide statistics on the number of fulltime (F/T) and/or parttime (P/T) instructors with advanced degrees in ESL-related fields. Instructors with advanced degrees can be expected to hold the minimum of a master's degree in Teaching of English as a Foreign Language (TEFL) or Teaching of English as a Second Language (TESL) or in applied linguistics.

Eligibility

Indicates the groups of applicants who are eligible for admission to the ESL program, as well as any special conditions in regard to eligibility.

Issues

Indicates that certificates of eligibility for U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) visa forms are issued by the program. The two major certificates of eligibility necessary for a visa are the I-20, for the F visa, and the IAP-66, for the J visa. Please note that the certificate of eligibility is not in and of itself a visa, which must be issued by appropriate consular officials at U.S. diplomatic offices in other countries, and will only be issued if applicants meet all conditions imposed by the U.S. embassy or consulate.

In some cases, the I-20 issued for study in a preacademic ESL program may include academic admission to the formal academic program of the sponsoring college or university. If so, a brief statement of the conditions for academic admission is provided in many entries, e.g., I-20 includes academic admission conditional on demonstrated English language proficiency.

Academic Credit

Some ESL programs sponsored by U.S. colleges and universities offer credit towards an academic degree for work completed in preacademic intensive ESL. This heading indicates whether such credit is offered, the amount of credit offered, and whether ESL can replace required courses in freshman English, a foreign language, an elective, or other academic courses.

May Take Academic Courses

In some cases, typically at the Advanced level, ESL students may take academic courses at the sponsoring college or university while still actively enrolled in an intensive ESL program. Information is provided as to whether it is possible to take academic courses, and on the conditions for taking academic courses, e.g., with permission from the ESL program staff.

Tests

ESL programs use a number of standardized tests to measure English language proficiency, most commonly the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) of the Educational Testing Service (ETS). This heading provides information on the standardized tests used by the program sponsor to measure achievement of English language proficiency.

Services

Several kinds of support services are commonly provided by ESL programs. Information is given as to whether the program offers academic counseling, academic placement (i.e., seeks to find an appropriate U.S. college or university for program students upon successful completion of the ESL program), field trips, homestays, a host family program (in which arrangements are made for ESL students to visit with U.S. families), personal counseling and/or recreational activities.

Costs

Cost data is provided on tuition, application fee, if any, activities fee, if any, and other fees. In some cases, an application fee may be applied to tuition if the candidate is admitted to the intensive ESL program, and this information is provided where available.

If room and board are not separate costs, but are included in tuition, entries provide that information.

Housing

Indicates whether the program offers campus housing or not. Also indicates charges for housing (Room) or housing plus food (Room and Board).

Off–campus housing may be available. Entries state whether off–campus housing is available or not, whether it is readily available or difficult to find, and whether it is moderately priced or expensive. If the program offers assistance in locating off–campus housing, that fact is indicated.

Board

Provides information on charges for food (Board). In many cases, housing and food (Room and Board) costs are combined into a single Room and Board charge, in which case the Board heading directs the reader, using the phrase, "Board plan included in housing," to the Housing heading, where information on the combined cost is provided.

(HE)

As noted above under Program Sponsor Name and Address, (HE) means that the program sponsor—the legal entity responsible for the intensive ESL program—is an accredited U.S. college or university. Programs which are not identified with the (HE) symbol are sponsored by corporations or other private organizations.

(P+C)

The (P+C) symbol at the end of a program entry means that an intensive, fulltime ESL program is located at an institution that also offers ESL courses which are not fulltime and are less intensive. Information on courses is provided in the second section of this book, English as a Second Language Courses at Postsecondary Level.

TESOL standards endorsed

This phrase at the end of an entry indicates that the sponsor organization has endorsed a set of standards for ESL programs developed by Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL), the professional association of ESL teachers and administrators. The TESOL standards are printed in full as an appendix to this book, and an introductory chapter in the front of this book provides information on their role in the field of English as a Second Language in the United States.

Users of this book are encouraged to consult the TESOL standards as part of their decisionmaking process in choosing an ESL program. The TESOL standards are the most complete statement of the standards by which ESL programs of high quality should be evaluated. The fact that an organization sponsoring an ESL program has endorsed the TESOL standards is an indication that the program attempts to meet defined standards of quality for ESL teaching and administration. Endorsement of the TESOL standards does not constitute formal accreditation of an ESL program by TESOL itself, however, since TESOL does not conduct formal program evaluations accompanied by site visits and interviews.

SECTION 2: ENGLISH AS A SECOND LANGUAGE COURSES AT POSTSECONDARY LEVEL

This section describes English language courses and semi–intensive ESL programs which are offered to support students from abroad enrolled for academic study at U.S. colleges and universities. These courses offer 15 or fewer hours of language instruction weekly. Although course descriptions in this section are chiefly intended for students, some are open to individuals not enrolled in study for an academic degree.

Overall Organization of the Course Descriptions

Courses are organized by state. See Map of the United States of America in this book. Within each state, courses are listed alphabetically by the name of the sponsor college, university or private organization.

Course Sponsor Name and Address

Entry numbers are used to identify the program within the listing sequence and in the indexes at the back of the book. The name of the the sponsoring college, university or private organization is followed by its address.

If the sponsor organization (the organization which is legally responsible for the program) is an accredited U.S. college or university, the last line of the entry indicates that fact with the symbol (HE). If the sponsor organization is a private corporation, association or other organization which is not an accredited U.S. college or university, the symbol (HE) does not appear at the end of the listing.

The address, telephone, cable, fax and telex information are as provided to IIE in response to the questionnaire for this book.

ESL Courses

ESL courses offered by the institution are listed. The level of English language proficiency at which a course is taught is indicated by one of the four standard symbols used in this book: B (Beginning), LI (Lower Intermediate), I (Intermediate), and A (Advanced). Most courses require advanced English language proficiency.

Each course listing indicates the number of hours per week and the terms during which the course is offered.

TOEFL Required for Academic Admission

International students applying for academic admission to a U.S. college or university must often meet a minimum standard of English language proficiency as demonstrated by their performance on the standard TOEFL examination (Test of English as a Foreign Language.) Minimum TOEFL scores required for undergraduate and, where appropriate, graduate admission are given under this heading.

Parttime ESL Courses Open to

Many U.S. colleges and universities offer parttime ESL courses to individuals who are not formally enrolled for an academic degree. This heading provides information as to whether parttime ESL is open to dependents of enrolled foreign students, or to business persons, tourists and other groups that can benefit from ESL classes.

Orientation

Orientation to U.S. higher education and to U.S. society is particularly important for the international student, who must deal with customs and practices very different from those to which he or she is accustomed from the moment of arrival in the United States. Most campuses offer an orientation for all incoming students, both U.S. and foreign. Many campuses also offer special orientation programs for international students, frequently in combination with the more general orientation given to all new students. This heading provides data on the availability and length of orientation, and on whether a special effort is made to orient the foreign student.

Services

International students require special support from campus services. If a campus provides academic and personal counseling and other special services to the international student, through the office of a foreign student adviser or by other means, the availability of such services is indicated here.

(HE)

As noted above under Course Sponsor Name and Address, (HE) at the foot of an entry means that the course(s) listed are offered by an accredited U.S. college or university.

(P+C)

The (P+C) symbol at the end of a course entry means that an intensive, fulltime ESL program is also offered by this institution. Related ESL programs are described in the first section of this book, Intensive English as a Second Language Programs.

TESOL standards endorsed

This phrase at the end of an entry indicates that the sponsor organization has formally endorsed a set of standards for ESL programs developed by the professional association of ESL teachers and administrators, Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL). The TESOL standards are an appendix to this book.

SECTION 3: ENGLISH AS A SECOND LANGUAGE COURSES AT SECONDARY LEVEL

This section offers information about intensive and semi–intensive ESL programs and English language courses that are offered to support students from abroad enrolled for academic study at the secondary level.

Most secondary–level ESL programs and courses are intended as supporting services for international students planning to complete their secondary education in the United States. However, many will enroll students for intensive ESL which is part of a course of education to be completed in students' home countries. This is particularly likely to be the case for summer programs.

The secondary–level ESL offerings described in this book are made available by private secondary schools, a number of which offer housing and board plans for the international student. IIE appreciates the courtesy of the National Association of Independent Schools (NAIS) in making available its mailing list for the survey for this section.

If you need information about ESL in U.S. public schools, contact the board of education of the community in which you are interested. Most U.S. cities have large populations of non–

English-speaking adults and children. The educational needs of these children are met by ESL and bilingual education programs which may also meet the needs of secondary-level international students.

Overall Organization of the Secondary School Descriptions

Entries are organized by state. See Map of the United States of America in this book. Within each state, offerings are listed alphabetically by the name of the sponsor school or private organization.

Secondary School Sponsor Name and Address

Entry numbers are used to identify the secondary school within the listing sequence and in the indexes at the back of the book. The name of the the sponsoring secondary school or private organization is followed by its address.

In some cases, a private organization's program is physically located on the campus of a secondary school, but the secondary school itself is not the sponsor (i.e., the corporate entity with legal responsibility for the program.) In such cases, the address indicates that the program resides on campus in care of (c/o) the secondary school, e.g., John Smith English Language Program, c/o John Doe School.

The address, telephone, cable, fax and telex information are as provided to IIE in response to the questionnaire for this book.

ESL Programs

All intensive ESL programs are identified by the phrase ESL Program after the address, followed by a table presenting the number of hours per week of required work.

Class is the number of required hours per week of classroom instruction at each level of the intensive ESL program. Lab is the number of hours per week of language laboratory required. CAI is an abbreviation for Computer-Assisted Instruction.

The levels of English language proficiency used in this section are as used throughout this book. Information on other aspects of ESL instruction are provided where available, e.g., information on optional activities, at the bottom of the table describing the class and lab offerings.

ESL Courses

Supporting ESL courses offered by the secondary school as part of its ongoing academic program are listed. The level of English language proficiency at which the course is taught is indicated by one of the four standard symbols used in this book: B (Beginning), LI (Lower Intermediate), I (Intermediate), and A (Advanced). Each course listing also indicates the number of hours per week required.

Academic Year

Where information was provided, indicates month in which school's academic year begins, and whether a summer session is offered.

Terms

Provides information on length-in-weeks of academic terms, and on the months in which new terms begin.

Longest Break(s)

Indicates longest break(s) during the academic year. Parents of international students should contact the school directly in regard to living arrangements for breaks in the academic program, as students may not be able to remain in dormitories or other living facilities during these periods.

Total Enrollment

Total enrollment is the number of both U.S. and foreign students studying at the secondary school during the periods of the year (academic year and summer) indicated.

Foreign Student Enrollment

Foreign student enrollment is that proportion of the total enrollment composed of students from other nations.

Eligibility

Indicates who may apply for admission to the programs and courses of the secondary school.

Issues

Indicates that certificates of eligibility for U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) visa forms are issued by the school. The major certificate of eligibility necessary for a visa at the secondary level is the I-20, for the F visa. Please note that the certificate of eligibility is not in and of itself a visa, which must be issued by appropriate consular officials at U.S. diplomatic offices in other countries, and will only be issued if applicants meet all conditions imposed by the U.S. embassy or consulate. Information on other visas held by enrolled students is provided as well.

Tests

A number of standardized tests are used to measure English language proficiency, most commonly the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) of the Educational Testing Service (ETS). This heading provides information on the standardized tests used by the program sponsor to measure achievement of English language proficiency.

Orientation

Orientation to U.S. education and to living in the United States is critically important for younger international students. Most schools listed in this section provide orientation for all incoming students, both U.S. and foreign. This heading provides data on the availability and length of orientation.

Services

International students require special support from school services. If a campus provides academic and personal counseling and other special services to the international student, the availability of such services is indicated here.

Costs

Cost data is provided on tuition, on room and board (housing and meal plan costs), if any, and on other fees. If room and board are not separate costs, but are included in tuition, entries provide that information. In some cases, cost information is provided as a comprehensive fee, which includes tuition, room and board, if any, and other applicable fees in one overall charge.

Housing

Indicates cost if a housing option (Room) is offered. Where housing costs are included in tuition or in a comprehensive fee, that information is provided.

Many, but by no means all, private secondary schools in the United States offer living facilities for students. Housing is more likely to be offered in a suburban or rural environment than in an urban environment, where most pupils are likely to be day students.

Board

Indicates whether the school offers a Board (food or meal plan) option, and how much it costs. Where board costs are included in tuition or a comprehensive fee, that information is provided.

Environment

Secondary schools were asked to indicate whether their facilities were located in an urban, suburban or rural environment. Urban environments are cities or large towns. Suburban environments are typically residential communities located within easy commuting distance of a larger city. Rural environments are small towns or villages located at greater distance from large cities, and are often farming areas and/or areas of scenic beauty characterized by open space.

International students and their parents may wish to obtain further information from the school itself as to the characteristics of the area in which it is located. Depending on the needs and sophistication of the student, a large city may provide ideal access to cultural events and services—or may seem over–populated and threatening. Similarly, a suburban or rural environment may provide especially valuable recreational opportunities for students with a preference for open spaces—or may seem unduly isolated from the stimulus of an urban environment. No one environment is the right one for every international student.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

The Institute of International Education does not attempt to review or evaluate programs and courses listed in this book. Inclusion of a program or course does not imply IIE approval or recommendation, nor does omission imply IIE disapproval. Program evaluations and additional information must be requested directly from the ESL program and/or course sponsor, NOT from IIE.

Remember that information for a reference book must be gathered well in advance of its publication date, in order to allow sufficient time for follow–up, editorial development, typesetting and printing. Users of this book will find the summaries provided helpful for planning purposes, but MUST contact the ESL sponsor directly for the most current information on programs and courses of special interest. At the point at which choices must be made, it is especially advisable to contact the ESL sponsor in regard to information likely to have changed over time (i.e., costs). Note that entries in this book provide address, telephone, fax, cable and telex information helpful in making direct contact with the educational institutions and organizations that sponsor ESL programs and courses in the United States. PLANNING FOR STUDY OF ENGLISH AS A SECOND LANGUAGE IN THE UNITED STATES

JoAnn Crandall
Center for Applied Linguistics

The Center for Applied Linguistics is a national clearinghouse for information on the practical applications of linguistics and its related fields.

A student looking for an English language training program in the United States faces an almost overwhelming array of choices. The increased use of English as a major language for science and technology, business and commerce, air and sea travel, and international communication, has resulted in an increase in the types of English language instructional programs available in the United States. The diversity of English language programs may be both heartening and confusing to prospective students or to the counselors assisting them.

English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States, now in its ninth edition, offers an effective path through the bewildering maze of program alternatives. While it cannot and does not comment on the quality of the programs listed, it does identify those programs which have endorsed the TESOL (Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages) Core Standards on Language and Professional Preparation Programs; this endorsement is one indication of the importance of the English language instructional program to that institution.

WHAT KINDS OF INFORMATION DOES THIS GUIDE PROVIDE?

Each entry in ELOPUS provides the following information:

- the type of instruction offered (a full English language program or courses for students already accepted into the academic institution);
- the name and address of the institution;
- the English proficiency levels for which the institution provides instruction;
- the length of terms;
- the months when enrollment is possible;
- the number of hours of instruction per week;
- the eligibility criteria;
- the type of visas for which the institution issues certificates of eligibility;
- the availability of housing;
- the fees.

While the entry is brief, it is possible to derive a rather good picture of the program. More specific information can be obtained by contacting the individual programs.

In reading these entries, it may be helpful to consider some of the following criteria for program effectiveness, drawn from both the TESOL Core Standards and the Guidelines for Selecting English Language Training Programs (both documents are appendices to this book).

The Intensity of Instruction in the Program

Intensive programs in English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States are those programs which offer 15 or more hours of instruction in English per week. Usually, intensive programs offer a full range of courses in all language skills, including listening, speaking, reading, and writing, often from beginning to advanced proficiency levels. If substantial English language proficiency development is needed, an intensive program is probably the best choice, since all things being equal, the more time allotted to English language study, the more progress a student is likely to make.

If what is needed is simply upgrading of language skills, then a nonintensive program of advanced courses (perhaps in composition, oral presentation, or reading skills) may be more appropriate for the student.

Faculty

Although parttime faculty members play an important role in many English programs, in general, the presence of fulltime faculty in an English language program underscores the institution's commitment to quality programming and suggests that the instructional program is likely to be cohesive, consistent, and effective. Fulltime faculty are expected to develop curricula and to contribute in numerous ways to strengthening the program and its course offerings. In addition, these faculty are readily available to offer students individualized attention and assistance.

Location

The majority of programs listed in ELOPUS are located at educational institutions. Some programs, however, are provided by organizations with substantial experience in offering language and cultural orientation programs in other settings. For a student seeking to adjust to academic life in the United States, it may be preferable to select a program or course housed in an academic institution; for students who are planning only a short stay in the United States, other programs may be better suited to their needs.

Where the institution is located is another important factor. Some students will find an urban setting more inviting; others may prefer a rural setting that offers the kind of hospitality that encourages students to immerse themselves into the English–speaking environment.

Of relevance, as well, is the likelihood of encountering other students who share the same language or cultural background. Naturally, finding friends who speak the same language can be helpful in the early stages of adjustment, but continued reliance upon these friends may limit the opportunities for students to use English and to interact with their English–speaking U.S. counterparts.

Class Size

In general, smaller classes are more likely to provide the kind of special assistance and attention that language learners need. However, if classes are too small, the potential for meaningful communication activities may be limited. Programs with classes of 5 to 15 students are ideal; those with 20 or more may simply be too large.

WHAT OTHER QUESTIONS SHOULD BE RAISED IN COMMUNICATING WITH THE INDIVIDUAL INSTITUTION?

In addition to using this directory, it may be helpful to communicate directly with the institution about matters such as those discussed below.

Faculty Credentials

Teaching English as a Second or Foreign Language (TESL/TEFL) is a professional discipline with its own set of course offerings and expectations. The program director and faculty who teach in an English language program should have advanced degrees (either a Master's or a Doctorate) in TESL, Applied Linguistics, or Language Teaching. The faculty should also have extensive experience in teaching English to foreign students. The number of years of teaching experience, the types of students, and the places where the faculty have taught English will suggest how likely the program will be able to understand the particular cultural, linguistic, and academic needs of the student and to provide an appropriate instructional program.

Type of Instructional Program

Since the needs for English language instruction are diverse, so, too, are the instructional programs which are provided to meet those needs. Thus, it is important to ask about the program design and the kind of curricula an institution uses.

Many programs offer basic, "survival" English to beginning students, in order to help them become more accustomed to life in the United States, especially to life in a U.S. academic community. At more advanced levels, the program usually emphasizes academic English and the skills required for students to succeed in their educational program. Some programs offer flexible placement procedures, allowing a student, for example, with more advanced reading skills and weaker speaking skills to take courses at different levels in these skills. This allows students to focus on improving particular skills.

Degree of Integration with Other Academic Programs

Since most students study English so that they can participate in English–medium academic programs, it is useful to discover ways in which the institution provides for the transition to other courses taught in English. This is a particularly important consideration for graduate students or students with more advanced English language skills.

Some institutions provide special–purpose English courses—such as English for engineers, English for business or economics, or English for scientists—with texts, tasks, and tests drawn from these disciplines, while focusing on the English language skills required for success in the disciplines. Others offer paired courses, such as an English writing course paired with a history course, or an English reading course paired with a psychology course. These paired courses assist students with English while they are enrolled in another academic course and often are receiving credit. Most programs address study and research skills and other types of academic language skills, but it would be useful to find out more about the ways in which they do so.

Academic Credit

Some institutions offer academic credit for English language instruction, although this is not a widespread practice. Those institutions that do offer credit consider English language study to be comparable to the study of other languages taught at the institution which receive credit. Students in degree programs who receive credit for their English classes may be motivated and value their English language instruction more.

Media

This guide indicates whether a language laboratory is used in the program. It would also be helpful to learn how the lab is used and how other educational technology is employed. There may be a learning center, staffed by a trained EFL professional who is able to point the student to appropriate materials and to provide supervision and communication practice as well. There may be opportunities for students to use video, computer–assisted instruction, or otherwise to take advantage of the technological advances which are now available to language learners. A program with a variety of media enriches the educational program and is likely to be motivating and appropriate for students with varied learning styles.

Additional Information

Institutions provide a number of additional services to support foreign students in their new environment. A student may want answers to questions such as the following:

- What efforts are made to assist the students in orientation to the United States? Is there a possibility of continued assistance after the initial orientation?
- Can students participate in homestays or in other activities which will enable them to experience more than the academic side of life in the United States?
- What kinds of services are available to spouses or other dependents? Are English language and orientation programs available to them as well?

CONCLUSION

Although program options may seem overwhelming at first, they also attest to the wide variety of English language and orientation programs offered. With the help of English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States, every student should be able to select an appropriate program.

TESOL STANDARDS AND SELF–STUDY

Carol J. Kreidler, Georgetown University
Past Chair, TESOL Committee on Professional Standards

Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL) is an international professional organization for the field of English as a Second or Foreign Language. Its members include researchers, administrators, materials developers, testing specialists, and linguists as well as classroom teachers and teacher trainers. The association is located in Washington, D.C. The TESOL Standards are an appendix to this book.

In most countries in the world a ministry of education or a nationally controlled body has the authority and responsibility in postsecondary education—indeed in most education—for regulation, evaluation, development of curricula and standards, and teacher examinations. In the U.S., however, this authority rests with each individual institution.

As a result, the U.S. system is large, flexible and responsive, but there is little consistency among postsecondary institutions with regard to admissions standards, quality of student body and levels of program expectation or performance. Postsecondary institutions in the past have not been eager to institute program self–evaluation. Outside pressures, usually from accrediting bodies which require self–studies as part of the accreditation process, have had to serve as the impetus for undertaking a self–study. Also, coordination and control over U.S. institutions by the state have recently increased while at the same time professional organizations have been developing standards of good practice. However, the bulk of evaluation for U.S. post–secondary education is a self–regulatory process that uses peer professionals and institutional pressure to meet generally accepted standards through self–assessment and periodic review for program improvement. The cornerstone of the self–regulatory system in the U.S. is voluntary accreditation.

Since the early 1980's, Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL) has been working to promote program self–regulation through self–study. Through its Committee on Professional Standards, TESOL has developed a program of self–study which has two main purposes. First, through examination and clarification of program goals and resources and study of how the program functions and how well it serves its clients, a program can assess its ability to meet the standards established by TESOL. Second, even though self–study is conducted for the purpose of program improvement, the process of self–study results in an increased capacity for the faculty, staff and administration to perform self–evaluation on a continuing basis. When the entire staff is involved in self–study, the faculty and staff of that program can begin to identify program strengths and weaknesses and to establish a commitment to change. Carefully designed self–studies include a mechanism for effecting change.

The first task of TESOL's Committee on Professional Standards was to develop a set of core standards which define a quality language program and a quality teacher preparation program. These core standards are statements of standards which the members of the TESOL organization believe to be inherent in quality programs.

Such principles are stated as: "Teaching English to speakers of other languages is an academic field requiring special programs for its students and special professional education and preparation for its practitioners"; and instructional and support staffs, administrators and students "have a wide range of needs and the basic right to pursue the fulfillment of those needs; that language is an essential tool for communication and the fulfillment of academic and personal needs; that there are differences between first and second language learning; and that all languages and cultures are worthy of respect and appreciation."

The core standards, accompanied by a self–study manual and a set of specific standards for various program levels, form the basis of TESOL's program of self–study. To date, more than 200 programs have submitted endorsements of the core standards while more than five have completed self–studies.

TESOL's program of self–study contains a set of clearly defined steps that a program must undergo if it wishes to participate in TESOL's program of self–study. The first step is the endorsement of the Statement of Core Standards for Language and Professional Preparation Programs (see appendix). A program may obtain a copy of the core standards from TESOL, 1118 22nd Street NW, Washington, DC 20037, and then write a letter of endorsement of these standards on program stationery. At the same time self–study materials consisting of the self–study manual, specific standards and questions for each program level, and past TESOL Newsletter articles on self–study may be requested in the same letter.

Self–study is a long process. It is not unusual for programs to spend almost a year planning and designing the study, organizing the process, carrying out the self–study and implementing change. This phase of self–study should conclude with a report on the study which contains a clear statement of program strengths and weaknesses as well as a timeline and plans for implementing change. When the report and supporting documentation have been compiled, they are submitted to TESOL where the report will be read and comments sent to the person submitting the report on behalf of the program.

The greatest effect of the self–study approach on program regulation is the result of the dynamic interaction of the review process as it evolves among and with the program staff and administration. It is through studying themselves that programs know themselves, and those programs which know themselves well and which involve their faculty, staff and administration can prosper. They not only create open climates but also provide enhanced quality of service. Self–monitoring brings prestige to the profession and represents the spirit in which TESOL works.

Those programs which have undertaken the first step in TESOL's program of self–regulation through self–study, that of endorsing the Core Standards, are indicated in this publication with the phrase TESOL standards endorsed as the last phrase in their entries. Many of these programs have requested the self–study materials and are, perhaps, in some stage of self–study. It is our hope that future editions of this volume will include information on those programs which have completed a self–study, an indication that a program is actively working to improve itself.

NAFSA PROGRAM OF SELF–REGULATION

Mary Peterson, Director, Field Service
National Association for Foreign Student Affairs

The National Association for Foreign Student Affairs (NAFSA) is a non–profit membership association that provides training, information and other educational services to professionals in the field of international educational exchange. The association's membership is composed of nearly 6,000 individuals and representatives of postsecondary institutions, community and educational organizations. NAFSA includes a large professional interest section, Administrators and Teachers of English as a Second Language (ATESL), comprised of professionals in the ESL field. NAFSA's Program of Self–Regulation may be obtained by contacting Field Service, NAFSA, 1860 19th Street, NW, Washington, DC 20009 (telephone (202)–462–4811). The NAFSA Principles for International Educational Exchange are an appendix to this book.

Established in 1983, the NAFSA Program of Self–Regulation is designed to assist educational institutions and related programs in assessing the strengths and weaknesses of their international educational exchange programs and services; improving the quality of these programs and services, thereby increasing the effectiveness of the educational exchange process; and strengthening their own ability to assess and improve international education, in a manner consistent with the mission of the institution.

Educational institutions participate in the program by:

1. endorsing the NAFSA Principles for International Educational Exchange as an appropriate code of good practice toward which the institution strives;
2. undertaking a self–study of their international educational exchange related programs and services;
3. placing a confidential copy of the report on file with NAFSA, along with any subsequent visitors' report(s).

NAFSA provides assistance to participating institutions. Relevant publications (e.g., Principles, a self–study guide, NAFSA manuals and guidelines on a variety of related topics) are obtainable for free or at a nominal charge. Consultants' services can be made available at any stage of the self–study on a flexible cost–sharing basis. Occasional regional and national self–study workshops focus on techniques of effective self–study, either at the institutional or program level.

Although participating institutions may choose to undertake a NAFSA–related self–study in conjunction with an institutional accreditation review, the NAFSA program is not intended to be a form of accreditation. Rather, it offers the means whereby educational institutions can use self–study and peer review as a tool for improving policy, programs, and procedures related to international education.

In cases where the NAFSA self–study is related to an external review, e.g., by a regional accrediting agency, NAFSA is pleased to work with the institution or, at the institution's request, the accreditor in suggesting knowledgeable members of the site visitation team, providing resource materials, etc.

Participating institutions are recognized periodically in the NAFSA Newsletter. To date, well over 100 institutions have completed one or more of the three requirements above.

NAFSA encourages program level self–study, and has conducted self–study workshops aimed specifically at the intensive English program. NAFSA advocates, however, that special attention be devoted not only to the goals, resources, functioning and outcomes of the program itself, but also to articulation between the program and its host institution (or organization).

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The map on the following pages shows the geographic location of the 50 states of the United States of America—where all programs and courses described in English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States are located.

The states are identified by their two–letter U.S. Post Office abbreviations, for two reasons:

- The two–letter U.S. Post Office abbreviations are more legible on a small map.
- Two–letter U.S. Post Office abbreviations are used consistently throughout this book to identify states as part of addresses, as is typically done in the United States.

Use this map for reference in identifying the geographical location of programs and courses of interest to you.

INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION

The Institute of International Education (IIE) is the largest U.S. higher educational exchange agency.

IIE builds international understanding through educational exchanges that reach nearly all the world's nations. Many IIE programs further international development goals.

A nonprofit organization with over 550 U.S. college and university members, IIE has provided information on educational exchange to higher education and the public for nearly 70 years.

USIA FULBRIGHT PROGRAM

The Institute assists the U.S. Information Agency (USIA) in the conduct of the graduate Fulbright Program for both U.S. and foreign students at the predoctoral level.

Foreign nationals who wish to apply for financial assistance through the Fulbright Program to study in the United States must apply through the binational Fulbright commission or designated U.S. diplomatic post in their home nation. IIE cannot accept direct applications from foreign nationals for the USIA Fulbright Program.

U.S. students enrolled in a U.S. college or university must apply through their campus Fulbright Program adviser. U.S. citizens not formally enrolled in a higher educational institution may request applicant information on USIA Fulbright Program grants from IIE.

PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION

IIE manages 200 programs which benefit approximately 10,000 men and women from nearly 150 nations each year. The Institute is an independent nonprofit agency. It organizes international projects at the request of sponsors such as the U.S. Information Agency, U.S. Agency for International Development, foundations, corporations, universities, foreign governments and international organizations.

PURPOSES AND PARTICIPANTS

IIE administers international education, training and research activities to fulfill goals developed in consultation with its sponsor organizations. Purposes can vary from the institutional development of a university in an emerging nation to multinational corporate staff development, from short—term training to long—term research on world food needs. Half of those assisted are foreign students pursuing U.S. graduate degrees. The Institute also assists large numbers of U.S. students and U.S. and foreign senior scholars, scientists, artists, corporate executives and community leaders eacy year.

SERVICES TO HIGHER EDUCATION AND THE COMMUNITY

IIE provides educational advising services worldwide that assist 200,000 individuals annually. IIE publications are standard guides to international study. IIE research reports provide a substantive basis for policy choices in the field of international exchange.

OVERSEAS EDUCATIONAL INFORMATION CENTERS

IIE overseas educational information centers are located in Bangkok, Thailand; Guangzhou, China; Hong Kong; and Mexico City. They offer extensive information resources useful to foreign nationals planning study at U.S. colleges and universities. Foreign students are encouraged to visit these centers.

U.S. OFFICES

U.S. offices are located in New York, the Institute's central office; Washington, DC; Atlanta, Chicago, Denver, Houston, and San Francisco.

Students and educators visiting New York City are encouraged to make use of the IIE International Education Information Center in planning international study. The center is located at IIE's headquarters office at 809 United Nations Plaza, and is open each weekday except for major holidays. The center cannot provide research assistance by phone or letter.

UCIEP: A Consortium of University and College Intensive English Programs

UCIEP: A Consortium of University and College Intensive English Programs, founded in 1967 as CIEP (Consortium of Intensive English Programs), is an independent consortium of forty-six American university and college-administered intensive English programs. UCIEP's fundamental organizational purpose is to advance professional standards and quality administration and instruction in intensive English programs at American universities and colleges. Additional purposes of UCIEP are to provide a communication network among member institutions and to serve as a source of information and consultation on matters regarding intensive English programs in universities and colleges.

At ELS Language Centers, we teach English as if our students' futures depended on it. Our course is one of the world's most intensive: 30 hours per week. Our instructors are qualified, experienced professionals. Over 400 U.S. colleges and universities accept our proficiency recommendation in lieu of the TOEFL.

Not all of an international student's day is spent in the classroom, however. We take very seriously our commitment to being a "full-service" English program by providing:

- ✓ A full-time Student Advisor at each school
- ✓ Orientation to the local community and American culture
- ✓ Housing assistance, including Homestays
- ✓ College advising and placement assistance
- ✓ Social and cultural activities
- ✓ Medical insurance
- ✓ Assistance with visa matters
- ✓ Help with bank accounts, driver's licenses, and doctor referrals
- ✓ Weekend travel planning
- ✓ Personal counseling
- ✓ And much, much, much more!

At ELS, we want our students to succeed — in and out of the classroom.

When we teach English at the Economics Institute
WE MEAN BUSINESS (and economics, management, computer training . . .)

The Economics Institute integrates courses in economics, business, and public administration with intensive English, computer training, and orientation to U.S. campus and community life. New terms begin every five weeks; a program is designed to meet the schedule and academic needs of each student.

The Economics Institute, established in 1958, has trained more than 6,000 participants from 124 countries. The Institute is located in beautiful Boulder, Colorado, a center for higher education, business, and scientific research.

Preparation for Master's and Doctoral Degrees
International students make a successful transition to U.S. graduate study through academic training, commercial test preparation (GMAT, GRE, and TOEFL), and university placement assistance.

Study Term in the U.S.A.
Students complement their overseas degree programs with a term of study at the Institute and personal experience of the U.S. economy and culture.

Professional Development Programs
Mid-career personnel in government, business and education earn an Institute diploma in economics, management or related specializations.

WHY STUDY ENGLISH AT A UNIVERSITY IN THE U.S.A?

There are many advantages to studying English in an Intensive English program at a public university in the United States.

YOU LEARN FASTER AND BETTER

- Your teachers are all native speakers of English and professionals in teaching English as a second language.
- You are in a living language laboratory when you step outside the classroom.
- You are surrounded by native speakers of English.
- You devote full time to learning English, not just an hour or two each day.

YOU LEARN ABOUT AMERICAN CULTURE

- You adjust to life in America before beginning academic studies.
- Your language program includes cultural orientation to the U.S.A.
- English programs in the U.S.A. offer a friendly full-care environment to help students overcome initial difficulties.
- Your language center will help you overcome homesickness and to adjust to life in a new environment.

YOU LEARN ABOUT AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES

- You can adjust to academic life on the U.S. campus where you will pursue your academic studies.
- You learn to feel at home at an American university.
- You learn what American teachers expect of their students in terms of tests, homework, and classroom discussion.
- You learn how the grading system works.
- You learn how to use an American university library.

Perhaps you already have the required TOEFL score for admission to an American university. It is still a good idea to spend some time in an Intensive English program. There you can polish your English skills, become accustomed to the sound of American English, and adjust to the cultural and academic differences of U.S. universities.

•English Language Training Institute• at The University of North Carolina at Charlotte

- Intensive English language instruction.
- Highly qualified faculty of native English speakers.
- Year-round admission.
- Average of 10 students per class.

The University

- One of ten U.S. institutions offering excellent educations while hold down costs, according to MONEY magazine.
- Ranked as one of the 10 best comprehensive universities in the Southern U.S. by U.S. News and World Report in last two rankings.
- All programs fully accredited. In addition, all professional programs are nationally accredited, a rare accomplishment for universities of any size and type.
- About 120 undergraduate and graduate degrees offered in Architecture, Business Administration, Computer Science, Economics, and Engineering (civil, electrical, mechanical and engineering technology). Graduate degrees include the Master of Business Administration and the Master of Science in Engineering as well as many others.
- The University is located in the dynamic city of Charlotte, a leading center of business and culture in the South. The climate is temperate, and scenic mountains and the beaches are within easy access.
- Enrollment passed the 12,000 mark in fall of 1987, and UNC Charlotte continues as one of the area's largest and fastest-growing universities.

RADFORD UNIVERSITY

WHY INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS CHOOSE RADFORD

Radford University is a selective, fully-accredited state university located in the City of Radford (14,000) in Southwestern Virginia. The university provides a pleasant, safe small town atmosphere with good transportation to Washington and New York. Radford's beautiful, modern campus offers students clean and comfortable residential, academic, and recreational facilities. Students who attend Radford receive a high quality education with excellent professors who teach a wide range of courses. The 1988-89 academic year costs of $7500 for undergraduates and $6800 for graduates were among the lowest in the U.S.

ABOUT RADFORD

In 1987-88 international students from 40 countries were among the university's 6800 undergraduates and 1200 graduates. The university limits classroom enrollments to continue Radford's tradition of individual attention to student needs. The City of Radford lies 650 meters above sea level in the Blue Ridge Mountains, a major vacation and outdoor area. Normal daytime temperature ranges are: Summer (June, July, August) 23°-31°C; Fall (September, October, November) 15°-26°C; Winter (December, January, February) -8°- 17°C; Spring (March, April, May) 11°-26°C. Transportation for international students is arranged from the nearby Roanoke Airport.

ENGLISH PROFICIENCY AND ADMISSIONS POLICY

TOEFL 525 or TOEFL 500 plus 135 hours of intensive English is required. Students with TOEFL 470+ may be admitted in September or January for a combination of semi-intensive English (9 hours per week) and a 50% academic schedule. Students with no TOEFL or less than TOEFL 470 may apply for intensive English courses and may also choose to apply for later academic admission at the same time. Admissions decisions are made as soon as applications are completed.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE INSTITUTE (ELI)

The ELI offers non-credit intensive English courses at all levels throughout the year and provides academic and personal advising to ELI students. On-campus housing is available to ELI students, and the size of each class is limited to ten students. The ELI provides extensive TOEFL preparation and practical communication is emphasized in all classes.

The statement of the TESOL Standards below is excerpted from: TESOL Standards and Self–Study Questions for Postsecondary Programs, available from TESOL, Suite 205, 1118–22nd Street, NW, Washington, DC 20037.

Using TESOL's Standards

These standards ... are intended to guide the self–study participants as they examine the purposes and goals of a program, administration, curriculum, implementation, and assessment procedures. The statement and standards, which provide detailed descriptions of quality ESOL programs, ... are intended to lead participants towards a description of their program which includes an examination of the current program as well as a review of the past and a projection for the future. It is the intent of TESOL and the Committee on Professional Standards that this manual lead ESOL professionals to consider thoughtfully what type of program is best for their constituency.

The idea is not to provide a list of statements or questions for which either positive or negative responses can be provided or upon which prescriptive evaluations can be made; rather, these statements are meant to serve as a basis for analysis and review of a program's organization and operation. They are not all inclusive but are an attempt to highlight the key features of most ESOL programs. The greatest effectiveness of the self–study approach comes from the dynamic interaction of the review process as it evolves among and with the participants of a program ...

Once the mechanism is in place for gathering the data, the study of them and the development of strategies for change, self–study can become an ongoing process. TESOL will maintain a list of those programs which have performed self–studies. Programs which have not submitted reports on further self–studies will not appear on the list.

Standards for Postsecondary ESOL Programs

Those standards are divided into those for intensive/non–intensive programs and support system ESOL courses. Programs denote a separate administrative structure while support system ESOL courses are offered through existing departments or units.

Standards for Intensive/Non–Intensive Programs

A. Statement of Purpose and Goals

1. There is a written statement of purposes and goals available to the public.
2. The statement is compatible with TESOL's Standards and the NAFSA Principles for International Educational Exchange.

B. Program Structure

Administration

1. There is a written description of the nature of the program (including whether it is intensive, non–intensive, credit or non–credit, and whether it is independent or part of a larger institution.)
2. There is a written description of the organizational structure of the program.
3. If the ESOL program is part of a larger organization or an institution of higher education, the two coordinate their efforts for the benefit of the students they serve.
   a. The institution integrates the ESOL program into all aspects of the larger organization which deal with ESOL students.
   b. There is a statement of the relationship of the ESOL program as a whole to the organizational structure of the other institution.
   c. The policies and practices regarding the administration of ESOL programs and courses are in keeping with those used throughout the larger institution.
4. There is a director with direct responsibility for the program.
5. The administrative personnel are ESOL professionals and have a master's degree or doctorate in a field appropriate to their responsibilities.
6. The administrator responsible for directing the instructional program has at least a master's degree with a concentration in ESOL and experience in the field and in administration and supervision.
7. The administrative staff is knowledgeable and supportive of the program goals and objectives.
8. Personnel policies are clearly specified in writing and administered fairly.
   a. There are statements concerning working conditions for the personnel including hiring, firing, rank promotion, salaries, benefits, pay increases, grievance procedures, teaching load, and number of hours of work expected.
   b. Personnel information is made available to all staff.
   c. Staff members are given written contracts and job descriptions.
   d. Staff are assigned specific responsibilities appropriate to their training and experience.
   e. There is orientation for new staff members. Both fulltime and parttime instructional staff (including graduate student teaching assistants) are oriented to the total instructional program, advised throughout the program, supervised and evaluated to ensure the high quality of the program.

- f. There is a core of permanent, fulltime teachers.
- g. There is a written statement that clarifies the use of fulltime and parttime teachers in terms of the needs and goals of the program.
- h. If the ESOL program is part of an institution of higher education, the policies and practices relating to the program faculty and staff are in keeping with those which apply to faculty with equivalent training and experience throughout the institution.
- i. Instructional staff who are assigned responsibilities equivalent to a fulltime position are compensated as fulltime employees.
- j. Salaries are comparable to the salaries offered by educational institutions in the area.
- k. There are appropriate support services for teachers.
- l. The administration provides opportunities for professional development.

9. The administration seeks input from the instructional staff, support staff and students in making policy, operational and instructional decisions.
10. Administrators provide for evaluation of their work by instructional staff, support staff and students.
11. The administration takes the responsibility for budgeting and financial management by ensuring that there is income sufficient to maintain a continuing program of high quality and by distributing money fairly and equitably to reflect the needs of the program. If the ESOL program is part of an institution of higher education, budgeting procedures are consistent with those used by other units.

Instructional Staff

1. The members of the instructional staff have a master's or doctorate with a concentration in teaching ESOL or are actively working toward these degrees.
2. Members of the instructional staff give evidence of a dedication to providing a high quality of instruction, taking into account a variety of needs and learning styles.
3. Instructional staff members follow the curriculum and program policies.
4. Instructional staff members seek to maintain constant and effective communication with all parts of the instructional program in order to function as a team committed to accomplishing the goals of the program.
5. Instructional staff consistently participate in evaluation activities for the purpose of maintaining a high level of individual performance.
6. Instructional staff members engage in a systematic growth and development program through their institutions, interact with peers within and without their program, and attend formal, professional and self–study meetings in order to maintain up–to–date competence in the field.
7. The instructional staff gives evidence of commitment to the profession as a whole and consistently seeks to improve the status of the profession.

Support Services

1. Students have access to personal and academic counseling provided by trained staff.
2. Students are housed in situations appropriate to their personal and academic needs.
3. Medical insurance is readily available.
4. The program provides orientation to the language program, to student policies, to other related institutions to the community, and to the country in general. It makes an orientation handbook available.
5. The program facilitates students' contact with the community through such programs as host family programs and other extracurricular activities.
6. There is a grievance procedure for students, and they are acquainted with this procedure.

C. Program Curriculum

1. The ESOL program has a written curriculum which includes observable performance objectives for all levels.
2. The curriculum is based on an assessment of the cultural as well as language needs of the particular group of learners.
3. The curriculum and methodology allow for different backgrounds, abilities, ages, current levels of achievement, learning styles, goals, and communicative needs of the students.
4. The ESOL program utilizes a curriculum which is different from that of English for native speakers.
5. The curriculum and methodology reflect the best current knowledge in the field, and they are compatible with the goals for the program.
6. Adequate, up–to–date materials are available for each student.
7. Additional teacher resource materials are available to enable the teachers to draw from the best sources available in the field for the widest range of needs.
8. The length and intensity of the program are sufficient for the completion of the curriculum goals.
9. The teacher–student ratio is appropriate to the goals of the course.

D. Program Implementation

1. Programs follow ethical standards for recruitment of students and maintain close communication with the clients they serve.
2. Criteria for admission to a program or enrollment in a course are clearly stated and adhered to by the entire staff including the recruiting staff, admissions officers and academic advisors.
3. Promotional materials and recruiting personnel make only justifiable claims about the instructional programs and other services available.
4. The program staff work closely with agencies and individuals sponsoring students and are accountable to them.
5. The program adheres to government regulations in admitting students and in dealing with them during their participation in the program.

6. Policies related to costs, scholarships, financial assistance and refunds are stated clearly to prospective students.
7. Academic and personal records (as well as immigration information, if applicable) are maintained on students.
8. Records are kept confidential in accordance with current laws, regulations and the policies of the institution.
9. Transcripts are made available.
10. Instruction is carried on in safe, comfortable surroundings conducive to learning.
11. Adequate supplies of equipment and furniture are available to carry out the program effectively.

E. Program Assessment

1. The program engages in periodic self–study and evaluation to review the program, its stated goals, purposes and accomplishments.
2. The self–study group considers input from administrators, instructional and support staff and students through a wide range of data including test results, observations, teacher evaluations, student evaluation, enrollment figures and financial statements.
3. The administration and instructional staff seek assistance for program evaluation and improvement from appropriate sources such as related professional organizations, outside advisers, specialists and peers in the field.
4. If the ESOL program is part of a larger institution, it participates actively in the self–study, evaluation and/or accrediting process of the institution.
5. Analysis of self–study data results in a written plan for improving or maintaining the quality of the program.
6. The program makes changes based on evaluative evidence.

Standards for Support System Courses

A. Statement of Purpose and Goals

1. Both credit and non–credit courses are offered as part of the institution's recognition of its responsibilities accruing from its admission of students whose English skills may not be the same as those of the majority of its students. This recognition is acknowledged in the institution's statement of mission and purpose.
2. Credit–bearing courses carry credit equivalent to parallel courses offered for native speakers.
3. Non–credit courses provide the type and level of instruction offered by other non–credit courses given at the institution.
4. ESOL courses are subject to the same types of review and revision procedures as other courses in the same department or unit.

B. Structure of Support System ESOL Courses Administration

1. Policies and practices regarding the administration of ESOL courses are in keeping with those used throughout the institution.
2. The administrator of the department or unit in which the ESOL courses are housed considers the needs and concerns of the ESOL courses and faculty important to the department or unit and consults with them in appropriate ways concerning such items as teaching loads and teaching assignments.
3. The ESOL courses are integrated into the course offerings of the department or unit in which they are housed.
4. The ESOL courses are given equal consideration in terms of scheduling, staffing, and class size to that given other courses in the department or unit.

Instructional Staff

1. The faculty responsible for the ESOL courses are fully integrated into the department or unit.
2. Permanent, fulltime positions are created and maintained to the fullest extent possible.
3. The ESOL faculty have appropriate training and/or experience for providing instruction in the ESOL courses offered.
4. The faculty are eligible for the same faculty ranks as others in the department with equivalent training and experience.
5. The job descriptions for ESOL faculty are equivalent to others in the department or unit of the same rank in terms of teaching loads, research expectation and commitment of service to the institution.
6. Appropriate consideration is given to the numbers and types of publications and refereed presentations in determining reappointment, merit, salary and tenure.
7. Appropriate consideration is given to the demands placed on ESOL faculty when those faculty are evaluated for teaching effectiveness.
8. ESOL faculty are eligible for the same types and amounts of support for professional development, such as travel or released time, as others in the department or unit.
9. ESOL faculty are included in all the deliberations of the department or unit to the same extent as other faculty. Such deliberations might include matters relating to hiring, firing, promotions, budgets and teaching assignments.

Support Services

1. The instituion recognizes that students with limited English proficiency need special attention and provides adequate support services to both students and faculty.
2. Students are provided with needed special advising and counseling services which are easily accessible and properly staffed.
3. ESOL faculty have access to the same types and levels of support services as those available to other faculty in the department or unit, such as secretarial help or equipment. In addition, such special support and equipment as are necessary for the ESOL courses, such as labs or video players, are provided.
4. Academic advisement for students of limited English proficiency must ensure that the students' workload be appropriate to their level of proficiency.

C. Curriculum

1. ESOL courses, both credit and non–credit, are fully integrated into the course offerings of the department or unit.
2. Procedures followed for initiating new course offerings and revising current offerings and deleting them are consistent with other such procedures in the department or unit.

3. Course requirements for credit courses which parallel those offered for native speakers are equivalent; provision is made for different teaching methods and class size.
4. Course requirements for non–credit courses are appropriate to the purpose for which the courses are offered.
5. Placement procedures are clearly articulated and made available to students. Students are advised of these procedures at the time of admission. Other faculty throughout the institution are aware of the procedures and adhere to them.
6. Courses which are offered without carrying academic credit or those which carry credit which will not count toward graduation or which will not transfer to another institution are clearly labeled as such. To avoid the students' having to take an overload in order to enroll in such non–credit courses, provisions are made for counting the course hours in figuring the course load.
7. Institutions which offer and may, on the basis of placement procedures, require non–credit courses clearly indicate to prospective students that such is the case. Students are aware at the time of admission that they may be required to take some courses which will not count toward their degrees.
8. The curriculum and methodology in the ESOL courses, whether credit or non–credit, reflect an awareness of the cultural needs, of the students and allow for different backgrounds, abilities, and learning styles, insofar as they can be accommodated by the goals of the courses.
9. The support system must have an adequate range of course offerings to accommodate the various levels of proficiency of the students admitted to the ESOL proram and to ensure the students genuine equality of opportunity to achieve the standards of proficiency of the institution.
10. The number of hours of instruction in ESOL at each level of proficiency must be adequate to achieve the objectives of the courses.

D. Implementation

1. Requirements for admission to any of the ESOL courses are clearly stated and available to students.
2. The criteria for enrollment in any given ESOL class are known and adhered to by all concerned, such as admissions officers and academic advisers.
3. Policies relating to fees, withdrawal from courses and refunds are appropriate and equivalent to those for other courses of a similar nature offered by the institution. They are clearly stated and made available to students and prospective students.
4. Academic and personal records for ESOL students are maintained carefully and in keeping with the practices of the institution.
5. All records are kept confidential in accordance with current laws and regulations and are in keeping with the policies of the institution.
6. Transcripts are made available for ESOL courses in the same ways as for other equivalent courses.

E. Assessment

1. ESOL courses are evaluated according to the same procedures, wherever possible, as other courses within the institution.
2. Evaluations to be used in revising courses and creating new courses are available to the ESOL faculty.
3. The administration and faculty seek assistance for the evaluation of courses and their improvement from such sources as professional organizations, outside specialists and peers in the field.
4. Self–study is used to determine the current effectiveness of course offering and the need for new or different offerings. Students are included in this process to the extent feasible.

APPENDIX B

GUIDELINES FOR INTENSIVE ENGLISH PROGRAMS

University and College Intensive English Programs

Prepared by: University and College Intensive English Programs (UCIEP). Reprinted from: Robinett, Betty W., editor, Guidelines, English Language Proficiency, Washington, DC: NAFSA, 1977.

Program Staff

1. An intensive English program should have a director and a core faculty whose principal commitments are to the program.
2. The director of the program should have at least an M.A. degree in linguistics, applied linguistics, or TESL/TEFL, or the equivalent (which may be defined as a minimum of two years experience as a fulltime faculty member in a program in ESL/EFL, either in the United States or in a binational center or comparable academic agency outside the United States). The director should have administrative experience or training.
3. Core faculty should have academic training or experience equivalent to the minimal standards for the director except in administration.
4. Teaching assistants should be taking or have taken graduate work in linguistics, applied linguistics, or TESL/TEFL. If the institution offering the program does not also offer graduate programs in linguistics, applied linguistics, or TESL/TEFL, it is the obligation of the program to provide for such faculty adequate facilities and opportunities for in–service training and/or instruction. Other parttime faculty should have academic training or experience equivalent to the minimal standards for the core faculty.
5. Inexperienced faculty and teaching assistants must be supervised closely either by the director or by specifically designated members of the core faculty.
6. If the program is administered by a college or university, the director and the core faculty should hold regular faculty or administrative appointments.

Program Content

1. An intensive program should provide for the student at least 20 hours a week of supervised instruction of which at least 15 must be classroom language instruction other than language laboratory. The total program should provide a minimum of 100 hours of classroom language instruction. Generally, an intensive program should provide 200 to 300 classroom hours rather than the minimum.
2. An intensive program should provide classes structured in such a way as to recognize
   a. the separable features of language skills, and
   b. levels of proficiency.

GUIDELINES FOR SEMI–INTENSIVE ENGLISH PROGRAMS

Program Staff

1. A semi–intensive English program should have a coordinator and core faculty who have at least an M.A. degree in linguistics, applied linguistics, or TESL/TEFL, or the equivalent (which may be defined as a minimum of two years experience as a fulltime faculty member in a program in ESL/EFL, either in the United States or in a binational center or comparable academic agency outside the United States).
2. Teaching assistants should be taking or have taken graduate course work in linguistics, applied linguistics, or TESL/TEFL. If the institution offering the program does not also offer graduate programs in linguistics, applied linguistics, or TESL/TEFL, it is the obligation of the program to provide for such faculty adequate facilities and opportunities for in–service training and/or instruction. Other parttime faculty should have academic training or experience equivalent to the minimal standards for the core faculty.
3. Inexperienced faculty and teaching assistants must be supervised closely either by the coordinator or by specifically designated members of the core faculty.
4. If the program is administered by a college or university, the coordinator and the core faculty should hold regular faculty appointments.

Program Content

1. A semi–intensive English program should provide for the student at least 10 hours a week of supervised instruction other than language laboratory. The total semi–intensive program should provide a minimum of 60 hours of classroom language instruction. Generally, a semi–intensive program will provide 100 to 200 classroom hours rather than the minimum.
2. A semi–intensive English program should provide classes structured in such a way as to recognize
   a. the separable features of language skills, and
   b. levels of proficiency.

APPENDIX C

GUIDELINES FOR SELECTING AN ELT CONTRACTOR

Center for Applied Linguistics

Excerpted from: Guidelines for Selecting English Language Training Programs, Washington, DC: 1978, Center for Applied Linguistics.

Program Goals

1. Preacademic Training. On completing ELT, academically qualified students should be proficient enough in English to commence a program of study designed for native English speakers. Specifically, students should:
   a. be able to communicate in a wide range of daily situations with native English speakers. . .;
   b. have a working command of English for educational purposes which includes the ability to participate and communicate effectively in programs of study conducted solely in the English language;
   c. have made a significant start on acquiring classroom strategies and study skills which includes following lectures and taking notes, using library resources, reading rapidly and selectively, and writing academic papers (students may need advanced instruction in writing after admission to a university);
   d. have attained a score on a generally recognized, standardized test of English which is acceptable to the academic institutions students hope to attend. Recognized tests include the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL), the Comprehensive English Language Test for Speakers of English as a Second Language (CELT), and the Michigan Test of English Language Proficiency (MTELP). Standardized test scores should be considered in conjunction with other evidence of student proficiency such as teachers' evaluations of classwork, achievement test scores, etc . . .
2. Nonacademic Training. On completing ELT, qualified trainees should be proficient enough in English to commence a training course or an on–the–job program conducted in or requiring English. In addition to a. and b. above, trainees should:
   a. have made a significant start on acquiring classroom strategies and study skills which include following lectures and demonstrations, consulting resource personnel, reading appropriate training materials, and writing reports of the kind required by their vocation (later, the trainees may need advanced instruction in writing if extensive writing is required by their fields);
   b. have attained a score on a generally recognized, standardized test of English which has been determined to be appropriate for their needs;

OR

   c. have demonstrated their language competence in specific areas which previous experience has shown to be adequate for the requirements of training in their fields.

Program Structure

1. Student Orientation. Since students normally are familiar only with the way they have been taught traditionally, they should be oriented toward the kind of instruction to be given in the program, including teachers' expectations and the rationale underlying methods and materials.
2. School Facilities. School facilities away from home should include convenient access to a library or a materials resource center, recreation area, and a social room for students. Where possible, permanently assigned classrooms to facilitate the use of visual aids and bulletin boards should be the norm.
3. Classroom Instruction.
   a. Class Size. The optimum size is usually 10–15 students, with smaller classes for students who know little or no English.
   b. Featured Skills. In successful programs, different class periods focus on different skills such as listening, speaking, reading, or writing. If the program includes an ESP (English for Special Purposes) component, some of the material used in the skill classes will be drawn from the particular field for which participants are being trained, or separate periods will be set aside to focus on those aspects of the basic skills which are especially needed in particular fields or for particular purposes.
   c. Levels of Instruction. In general, a program offering several levels of instruction comes closer to meeting individual student's needs than a program offering only elementary, intermediate, and advanced levels. Different levels of instruction include high–elementary, low–advanced, small–group work sessions within classes, regular use of tutors, specially prepared learning packets, etc.
4. Maximizing Students' Contact with English. Some U.S.–based programs, for instance, provide functional communication practice through extended stays in American homes, host–family visits, conversation hours with native English speakers, and/or roommates from other language backgrounds if campus housing is used.
5. Crosscultural Communication. In programs based in English–speaking countries provision should be made for handling of crosscultural subject information. Often in U.S. programs, for example, student advisors assist students with crosscultural matters, as well as help them with visa formalities, money exchange, etc. In some programs, crosscultural communication is part of the curriculum.
6. Student Progress. At regular intervals, responsible programs evaluate student progress and provide written reports to each student and each student's sponsor on their progress.

   Preferably, evaluations should be done every eight weeks.

Program Staffing

Good language teaching is a complex endeavor requiring varied and specialized skills. Teachers' effectiveness depends partly on how many additional responsibilities they have. If teachers are burdened with such concerns as curriculum and materials development in addition to fulltime teaching responsibilities, their primary effectiveness will be reduced. To ensure the realization of the objectives of the language program these duties should be assigned to specialists. If they are assigned to classroom teachers, there should be a corresponding reduction in the teaching load.

1. Total Program Staff. Good ELT programs usually have individuals qualified in:
   - a. EFL teaching,
   - b. EFL program administration,
   - c. teacher supervision,
   - d. language proficiency testing,
   - e. curriculum development,
   - f. students' vocational specialization, if the program is nonacademic,
   - g. student advising,
   - h. audiovisual aids, and
   - i. administrative and clerical support.
2. Staff Qualifications. All staff members should have training in other languages and experience with different cultures.
   - a. Teachers. Teachers should have completed a professional program in teaching English as a foreign or second language. Qualified teachers include those:
     - (1) with master's degree in TEFL/TESL or applied linguistics,
     - (2) with TEFL/TESL certificates,
     - (3) in TEFL/TESL diploma programs,
     - (4) who are supervised TEFL/TESL trainees, or
     - (5) with demonstrated, previous, successful experience in EFL teaching.

Personal qualities, professional competencies, and experiences of EFL teachers are described in documents available from TESOL and NAFSA.

   - b. Program Director. The program director, in addition to the same qualifications as teachers, should have:
     - (1) at least two years teaching experience and
     - (2) successful previous administrative experience in ELT programs. . . .
   - c. Other Staff. Staff members should have training and experience in their areas of specialization and be familiar with the culture, customs, and language needs of the students.
3. Types of Teachers. Most universities, and at least some other EFL programs in English–speaking countries, use some teaching assistants or interns who are graduate students working toward an M.A./M.S. or a Ph.D. This procedure is legitimate as long as the intern teachers are closely supervised by senior staff members with fulltime commitments to the EFL program and they are paid appropriately.
4. Work Schedules. A maximum teaching day should involve no more than four hours of classroom contact with students. If additional duties are required of the teacher, the teaching load should be reduced accordingly.
5. Teacher Salaries. Exact salaries vary, depending on institutional policy, geographic region, experience, training, and a number of other factors. U.S. college and university teachers are usually ranked, from highest to lowest in salary and experience, as professor, associate professor, assistant professor, lecturer or teacher, and teaching assistant. In addition to salaries, they receive certain benefits including health–care insurance, sometimes life insurance, and/or retirement fund contributions.

Program Content

The program content should be based on and clearly reflect English–training goals. Course materials, teaching methods, and classroom procedures should be directly related to those areas of skill development (i.e., speaking, listening, reading, and writing) which have been identified as prerequisites to the students' academic or vocational training. There should be maximal opportunity for students to practice the skills being taught and to learn strategies for effective transfer of these skills to particular areas of interest. (Thus, for example, at the advanced levels of a preacademic program, the listening comprehension segment of the program should include practice in listening to and taking notes on the type of lecture material students will hear in academic classes.) Students should also receive systematic feedback on their progress toward their particular language–training goals.

1. General Programs. Preacademic EFL programs are usually based on the assumptions that all their students:
   - a. are approximately the same age,
   - b. have received appropriate preuniversity academic training, and
   - c. come from a variety of language and cultural backgrounds.
2. Program Materials.
   - a. The contractor must supply evidence that the materials used in the ELT program will achieve the client's objectives. It should not be assumed that one set of materials will meet the objectives of all programs, especially if the program is specifically designed for the client. The contractor must demonstrate that:
     - (1) the materials are appropriate for attaining the specified objectives,
     - (2) the materials offer the possibility of moving from one level of proficiency to the next,
     - (3) the materials focus on the development of the specific language skills required by the objectives of the program,
     - (4) the materials are organized in manageable segments for both students and teachers, and
     - (5) proficiency is being measured by administering and reporting scores from a generally recognized test of English proficiency or other examination which the contractor can prove effective.
   - b. Materials Development. The contractor must supply evidence that the people developing (or selecting) the materials are:
     - (1) trained, experienced specialists in EFL materials development;
     - (2) familiar with the different languages and cultures of different countries; and
     - (3) knowledgeable about the language, culture, and specific training needs for specially designed ELT programs.
   - c. Audiovisual Materials. The contractor must demonstrate that the audiovisual materials proposed for the program are oriented toward developing competency in the specific language skills required by the students.
   - d. English for Special Purposes. In general, materials for quality special purpose courses require more time to prepare and are more expensive because of the additional analyses required of job skills, language skills, and on–site testing.

APPENDIX D

NAFSA PRINCIPLES FOR INTERNATIONAL EDUCATIONAL EXCHANGE

National Association for Foreign Student Affairs

The National Association for Foreign Student Affairs (NAFSA) is a nonprofit membership association that provides training, information and other educational services to professionals in the field of international educational exchange. NAFSA includes a large professional interest section, Administrators and Teachers of English as a Second Language (ATESL), comprised of professionals in the ESL field. NAFSA's Program of Self–Regulation may be obtained by contacting the Director, Field Service, NAFSA, 1860 19th Street, NW, Washington, DC 20009 (telephone (202)–462–4811).

Participating in the NAFSA Program of Self Regulation

Established in 1983, the NAFSA Program of Self–Regulation is designed to assist educational institutions and related programs in assessing the strengths and weaknesses of their international educational exchange programs and services; improving the quality of these programs and services, thereby increasing the effectiveness of the educational exchange process; and strengthening their own ability to assess and improve international education, in a manner consistent with the mission of the institution. Educational institutions participate in the program by:

1. endorsing the NAFSA Principles for International Educational Exchange as an appropriate code of good practice toward which the institution strives;
2. undertaking a self–study of their international educational exchange related programs and services; and
3. placing a confidential copy of the report on file with NAFSA, along with any subsequent visitors' report(s).

NAFSA provides assistance to participating institutions. Relevant publications (e.g., Principles, a self–study guide, NAFSA manuals and guidelines on a variety of related topics) are obtainable for free or at a nominal charge. Consultants' services can be made available at any stage of the self–study on a flexible cost–sharing basis. Occasional regional and national self–study workshops focus on techniques of effective self–study, either at the institutional or program level.

Although participating institutions may choose to undertake a NAFSA–related self–study in conjunction with an institutional accreditation review, the NAFSA program is not intended to be a form of accreditation. Rather, it offers the means whereby educational institutions can use self–study and peer review as a tool for improving policy, programs, and procedures related to international education. In cases where the NAFSA self–study is related to an external review, e.g., by a regional accrediting agency, NAFSA is pleased to work with the institution or, at the institution's request, the accreditor in suggesting knowledgeable members of the site visitation team, providing resource materials, etc.

Participating institutions are recognized periodically in the NAFSA Newsletter. To date, well over 100 institutions have completed one or more of the three requirements above.

NAFSA encourages program level self–study, and has conducted self–study workshops aimed specifically at the intensive English program. NAFSA advocates, however, that special attention be devoted not only to the goals, resources, functioning and outcomes of the program itself, but also to articulation between the program and its host institution (or organization).

NAFSA Program of Self–Regulation

In early 1980 the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs convened the Task Force on Standards and Responsibilities to address the growing concern that NAFSA and its institutional and individual members had not been active enough in the establishment of useful, recognized standards or principles of effective practice for those involved in the many aspects of international educational interchange. The result of their deliberations was development of a program of self–regulation which will draw on the experience and leadership of the Association and its members, but will also thoroughly involve faculty members, administrators, and others on college campuses who are affiliated with foreign students and scholars.

Embodied within the program of self–regulation is the set of NAFSA Principles for International Educational Exchange. However, the program is much more than a set of standards—it provides for assessment of strengths and weaknesses in interchange in light of the Principles and permits institutions to plan their programs and/or improve their services on the basis of knowledge gained through this self–study process.

Components of the NAFSA program of self–regulation are:

1. The endorsement by member institutions of the NAFSA Principles of International Educational Exchange.
2. The formulation and publication of a self–study guide and the development of a cadre of consultants who can assist institutions to design, organize, and conduct self–study.
3. The development of professional experience on the NAFSA staff to guide the development of the program, including self–study workshops.
4. The development of a program of voluntary peer visits to complement the self–study process.
5. The development of a working relationship with regional accrediting associations so that where appropriate, the NAFSA peer visit will be concurrent with regional review.
6. The development of a recognition process for institutions that voluntarily conduct self–study processes and place self–study peer visit reports on file with NAFSA.
7. The development of a complaint/referral mechanism which would be guided by advice from legal counsel.

The Board of Directors of the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs endorsed this program of self–regulation, including the NAFSA Principles, in May, 1981.

Principles for Institutions

The movement of students and scholars across community, cultural, geographic, and national boundaries has been recognized for centuries as essential to the discovery of truth, new knowledge, and the means of applying what is learned abroad to human enrichment and progress. In the second half of this century the interchange of students and scholars has grown steadily, become more formalized and an increasing influence upon U.S. higher education and the society as a whole. Indeed, the significance of the interdependence of nations, peoples, and world systems has brought international education into the very mainstream of higher education planning and requirements.

Programs of international educational exchange take many forms and are located in institutions of divergent purposes, sizes, and settings. Regardless of form and content the value of any program can be realized only when a college or university has made a conscious decision to be involved in international educational exchange and has made a commitment of resources commensurate with the nature and scope of that exchange. Such recognition and commitment require adherence to the following institution-wide principles:

1. The institution should have a clearly stated policy, endorsed by the governing board, setting forth the goals and objectives of the international educational exchange program or programs developed by the institution. This policy should be manifest in the institution's planning and budgeting. Personnel and program resources—administrative and academic—should be sufficient to assure that the program can be operated in ways consistent with the principles presented in this document.
2. The executive staff of the institution should discuss with the faculty and administrative staff the implications of the international educational exchange policy for the academic programs and academic staff.
3. Programs in international educational exchange should be closely related to and consistent with the basic purposes and strengths of the institution.
4. Regardless of program size, the institution should acknowledge its responsibility to demonstrate sensitivity to cultural needs—social, religious, dietary, and housing. These factors must be accounted for in the planning and execution of the program.
5. Special services required by involvement in international educational exchange should be performed by personnel who are trained for their particular responsibilities, and institutional policy should ensure that faculty and administrative staff receive appropriate training for the activities they manage.
6. Administrative staff and faculty should seek to develop and maintain respect and sensitivity toward those from different cultures in the execution of their responsibilities for international educational exchange programs.
7. The institution should periodically evaluate programs, policies, and services, in light of established goals, and regularly review those goals.

Principles for the Admission of Foreign Students

Foreign citizens have usually been educated in school systems that vary from those in the United States. As a result, students from other countries are often unfamiliar with U.S. procedures and terminology. Institutions that admit foreign students must develop a sensitive and flexible admissions policy that reflects an awareness of different academic backgrounds and personal expectations.

To assist institutions in establishing a sound admissions policy and an effective admissions system, criteria for ethical recruitment were developed at a Wingspread colloquium in March 1980. These criteria, known as the Wingspread Principles, are presented in Foreign Student Recruitment: Realities and Recommendations, and are incorporated in the following principles:

1. The admissions goals and policies for foreign students should be related directly to overall institutional goals and policies and include:
   - The academic characteristics of students to whom admission is offered.
   - The level—graduate or undergraduate—of students sought.
   - Geographical areas to be emphasized or discouraged.
   - The number of students desired (as a proportion of the student body).
   - The extent to which the institution will make financial resources available to foreign students.
2. Admissions materials should be thorough, complete, and clearly written; they should be sensitive to candidates' unfamiliarity with U.S. education and lack of facility in the English language. Care should be taken to include:
   - Detailed information about the admissions requirements and procedures.
   - Candid, pertinent, and current information so that students unfamiliar with United States higher education may make informed academic judgment.
   - Realistic information about full costs of study and living expenses, as well as the availability of financial aid.
   - English language requirements and, if admitted initially for an English language training program, the degree of commitment the instution accepts for subsequent education of the student in another of its academic programs.
   - Specific information about requirements of academic programs.
   - Complete information regarding the conditions of admissions and acceptance, deposits, orientation, and all steps to be followed prior to arrival.
3. Recruitment of foreign students for both academic and English language training programs must be conducted in an ethical, responsible manner.
   - The student's educational goals must be ascertained and a responsible judgment made about whether they can be achieved at the accepting institution.
   - Admissions decisions should be made using complete files including academic documents, English proficiency reports, and other supporting materials.
   - Admissions responsibilities, including issuance of the visa eligibility certificate, should never be delegated to third parties outside the institution.

- Applicants to an English language training program must be given full information about the extent of the institution's commitment to admit such applicants subsequently to another of its academic programs or provide assistance in obtaining admission to another institution.

4. The foreign admissions process should be conducted by personnel who are trained and competent in the interpretation of foreign educational records. These duties may be conducted on a full or parttime basis as required by the size of the effort.
    - At the undergraduate level, foreign student admissions—usually a highly centralized process—should be enhanced by faculty advice.
    - In foreign graduate admissions, where deans' offices and faculty committees often play an important role, the advice and recommendations of admissions staff should be carefully considered in the decision process. The important contribution each individual can bring to the admissions decision should be recognized.
    - Special reference resources should be acquired and new materials acquired as they become available.
    - Admissions personnel should call on the expertise of individuals on the campus, elsewhere, or abroad who can assist in providing sound evaluations.
5. The functions of the admissions office should be coordinated with those units responsible for English language training, academic programs, and student advising services, and there should be regular contact and sharing of information among those responsible for these functions.
6. The institution's foreign student program should be studied periodically in order to formulate any needed adjustments to admissions criteria, procedures and processes:
    - Entering characteristics should be correlated periodically with student retention and other measures of performance.
    - Students should be queried periodically about reactions to admissions materials and procedures.
    - Other campus offices as well as cooperating agencies should be queried about the effectiveness of the admissions materials and procedures.

Principles for English Programs and Determination of English Proficiency

An extremely important factor in determining whether the presence of foreign students at a college or university will be a mutually beneficial experience for the students and the institution is the students' ability to use the English language. A student who cannot communicate adequately with faculty, staff, or fellow students will encounter significant difficulties in carrying out even limited daily activities. Moreover, serious deficiencies in English will hamper a student in pursuing an academic program at any level. For those students serving as graduate teaching assistants, the ability to speak English effectively in a classroom is especially critical.

For these reasons, an institution must carefully evaluate the English proficiency (overall ability to use the language) of prospective students when they are being considered for admission. In evaluating English proficiency, both level and field of study should be considered, since the most critical question to be answered is how well the student will be able to cope with a specific program at a given institution. Students whose English proficiency seems adequate for a regular academic program often need an English support course or courses in order to function more efficiently in the classroom or to meet an institutional English requirement. Institutions that maintain a policy of admitting foreign students who are qualified academically but who have limited or minimal skills in English must provide halftime or fulltime (intensive) programs in English as a second language or refer students to English training programs where they can receive adequate instruction.

In an effort to establish guidelines by which institutions can evaluate their own or other English programs, NAFSA supports the following principles. These standards apply first to the question of determining English language proficiency and then to the training programs themselves. Except where specifically noted, these principles are meant to apply both to academic institutions and to private, proprietary organizations which offer English training programs.

Determining English Proficiency

1. The procedures and criteria established for determining English proficiency should be clearly defined. While these procedures should be uniform and comprehensive, they must take into consideration differences presented by at least three common situations:
    - For students being admitted directly from overseas, English proficiency should be determined on the basis of results from widely accepted tests designed for this purpose.
    - For students who have enrolled in intensive English language programs conducted by the institution to which they are applying, additional information should be sought regarding the students' overall use of English, specific strengths and weaknesses, and motivation for continued improvement. In this regard there should be close communication between the admissions office and the English language program.
    - For students who have been enrolled in intensive English language programs at other institutions or at private language schools, similar information indicating level of English language proficiency should be sought. Admissions personnel should seek the assistance of any specialists in English as a second language at their institutions for guidance in interpreting such information.
2. Institutions should periodically assess their capacity to successfully determine English proficiency of prospective foreign students in light of the students' performance in subsequent academic programs.

English Support Courses

Students with sufficient command of English to begin regular academic work at a college or university frequently require additional training to prepare them for tasks encountered during their program of studies. This training is best provided through English support courses taken in conjunction with regular academic courses in the students' fields. These English courses should address the special needs of students whose native language is not English. They typically range from courses which are the equivalent of freshman English to advanced courses in technical English for graduate students.

3. After admission, the institution should employ effective procedures to identify those students who require some specialized training in English in light of the specific course of studies to be pursued. Special care should be taken to provide training in oral English skills for foreign graduate students assigned as teaching assistants.
4. Support courses should be designed and taught by individuals with training in the teaching of English as a Second Language.

Intensive English Programs

The purpose of an intensive English program is to develop and strengthen the English skills of persons whose native language is not English, usually in preparation for pursuing an academic program at the graduate or undergraduate level. Such individuals generally do not have sufficient command of English to begin regular academic work at a college or university. Some programs administered by colleges and universities enroll only students who have received academic admission to the institution but require short–term training, often in the summer. Most programs at academic institutions maintain year–round schedules and enroll people at varying levels of proficiency who intend to enter degree programs at the same or other institutions. Finally, a large number of programs are administered by private organizations. These latter programs, often housed at academic institutions, enroll students who must all continue their academic studies elsewhere. Based on experience from many established programs, it is not unrealistic to expect students who begin at the lowest levels to require a full calendar year to reach levels of proficiency sufficient to begin academic work.

5. Intensive English programs should establish clear goals and objectives for the training they provide. In the most general terms, these goals would be to provide sufficient and appropriate training to enable students to meet test score requirements established by the institutions they plan to attend.
6. In order to achieve these goals, intensive English programs should receive adequate support from their sponsoring institutions. Although no single administrative pattern is required, intensive programs should be sufficiently independent to permit the smooth functioning of all activities and units.
7. The director and core faculty of an intensive English program should have principal commitments to the program. The director should have advanced academic training in the teaching of English as a Second Language and have teaching and administrative experience, if possible, including overseas experience. Parttime instructors, especially if they are graduate students in a university program, should be taking or have taken graduate work in the teaching of English as a second language.
8. To ensure that students will be adequately prepared for an academic program, the syllabus of an intensive English program should include training in a variety of skills. The most basic are listening (understanding spoken English) and reading (understanding written English). Also of importance for academic work are speaking (in both formal and informal settings) and writing (primarily expository writing needed in most fields of study).

Principles for Foreign Student/Scholar Services

An institution that enrolls foreign students or invites foreign scholars should recognize that individuals from different cultures and educational systems have special needs for advice and assistance. These needs must be met by services that are organized, directed, and funded by the host institution. The scope and level of such services is to some extent dependent on the number of foreign students and scholars. Regardless of their number, however, the presence of foreign students and scholars requires certain basic levels of support which enable them to function successfully in U.S. colleges or universities. The following principles concern the provision of these essential services:

1. The host institution should state clearly its intentions to provide special services for the foreign students and scholars it brings to its campus. These services should include:
   - Advisory and counseling services.
   - Mandated and technical services in compliance with U.S. government regulations.
   - Coordination and liaison with the community.
2. Regardless of the number of foreign students and scholars, the level of funding, or other circumstances, there must be one unit in the host institution that is responsible for coordinating these services, and there should be clear and widely acknowledged designation of responsibility for these services.
   - These duties may require fulltime or parttime staff, depending upon the size of the clientele. Where possible, it is highly desirable to have a single individual or office designated to provide these advisory services.
   - The staff should be knowledgeable about U.S. immigration law and regulations.
3. The institution should provide ample professional services which are fully accessible to foreign students and scholars. The intention of these services is to assure that maximum benefit is derived from the educational experience. The advisory services must seek to remove impediments and to solve problems on behalf of these individuals.
   - The advisory staff must work closely with other campus and community resources which can be of assistance before arrival and throughout the individual's stay.
   - An orientation program that introduces students to the physical environment, registration procedures, academic policies, housing, counseling and health services, visa requirements and INS regulations, financial matters, and social and intercultural activities should be provided.
   - Advisory services should be provided on an ongoing basis with respect to personal counseling, emergency needs, institutional policies, preparation for departure, and re–entry to home countries upon completion of stay.

- The advisory staff serve both the institution and the students and scholars it enrolls; they should, therefore, perform an intermediary role and be a channel of communication between those individuals and outside agencies or institutions.
- The advisory staff should seek to bring an intercultural dimension to the educational programs of the institution and the general life of the community.
- Advisory services should include academic advising—performed either by faculty members or foreign student advisers.

4. The advisory staff should exercise their duties in an ethical and professional manner. They must:
   - Adhere to the regulations of the U.S. Government, especially those of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.
   - Decline awards and unethical requests for services.

Principles for the Provision of Community Services and Programs

The presence of foreign students and scholars on campus and in the community involves crosscultural relationships and provides opportunities for increased global awareness. Individual contacts and the sharing of a variety of social and professional activities provide the opportunity for mutual appreciation of different cultural patterns and national aspirations.

Although it may serve a wider constituency at the state or national level, the college or university is an integral part of the community in which it exists. Colleges and universities which enroll foreign students and scholars should make, in cooperation with the community, every effort to assist these students in their adjustment to life in an American community. They may also enhance the education of foreign students and scholars by offering a variety of experiences, both on campus and in the community, which will ensure that optimum benefit is derived from the period of study in the United States.

Institutions should be receptive to approaches from the community and should, if necessary, take the initiative in establishing a relationship with the community:

a. to explain the needs of foreign students and scholars,

b. to identify the resources represented by foreign students, and

c. to explore and make full use of the willingness and ability of the community to provide services and programs.

Through the office of the foreign student adviser or its equivalent, institutions should provide assistance, advice, and information as requested by the community for the development of programs and services for foreign students and scholars. These efforts should be evaluated periodically.

Community programs and services should adhere to the following principles:

1. Community groups and organizations should seek to provide programs and services that enhance the experience of the foreign students and scholars while increasing the level of international and intercultural awareness in the community.
2. Community programs and services should be developed in cooperation with the university office that provides on–campus service to foreign students and scholars. Each should be competently designed and conducted and, where possible, coordinated with other community efforts.
3. Community programs must embrace a sensitivity to, and appreciation of, the religious, cultural, and national backgrounds of foreign participants and a proper regard for confidential personal information that may be offered by foreign and American participants.
4. Community groups and organizations should provide professional training for volunteers and paid staff to ensure that programs are competently administered and community resources effectively used.
5. Community groups and organizations should periodically evaluate their programs, policies, and services in light of their established goals and the changing needs of foreign students and scholars.

Principles for U.S. Study Abroad

One of the most effective ways to increase U.S. understanding of other languages and cultures and to improve our ability to function effectively in this interdependent world is to provide individuals with opportunities to study abroad. By living and studying in another country people learn to live with and appreciate different points of view and gain a more global perspective on life's challenges and opportunities.

The institution that endorses the concept of study abroad should provide some form of basic advisory services. Many opportunities exist for American students interested in studying abroad—sponsored programs of their own institution, programs sponsored cooperatively with other institutions, and hundreds of direct opportunities which may or may not have U.S. institutional sponsorship.

These principles apply to the delivery of advisory services as well as to the direct administration of a study abroad program or cosponsorship of a program with other institutions.

1. Within the context of its overall international educational objectives, an institution should have a clearly stated policy about its intentions and goals for facilitating study abroad.

Advisory Services for Study Abroad

2. Recognizing that programs and advising may be handled by various people on campus, there should be a central point of access to useful information about overseas opportunities. A library of essential study abroad information materials should be maintained.
3. Faculty and staff members who are responsible for advising should be identified and listed in campus reference literature. These individuals should be given opportunities to develop their abilities to provide sound, knowledgeable, and objective advice about study abroad programs. Important components of advising include the following:
   - Clarifying objectives for wanting to go abroad.
   - Identifying opportunities that are educationally sound and culturally beneficial.
   - Determining the quality, value, and appropriateness of a particular study abroad experience.
   - Coordinating evaluation of students' educational background with admissions personnel of foreign institution.

- Understanding the implications of a particular study abroad experience on graduation requirements, transfer credit, and financial aid.

4. Returning students should be asked to provide evaluations to enable study abroad advisers to determine the usefulness of the program for those students and possible future participants in that program, and to evaluate the usefulness of the advisory services they received before going abroad.

Cosponsoring Study Abroad Programs Administered by Other Institutions

In order to encourage study abroad or broaden the options readily available to its students, a number of institutions have elected to join consortia or cosponsor study abroad programs in which another institution handles program administration. A consortium or cosponsorship arrangement for study abroad should provide opportunities that are consistent with the institution's overall academic objectives, requirements, and standards; the programs should be administered in accordance with the principles for study abroad program administration (see below); and the home campus role in the cosponsorship should be evaluated periodically by faculty, staff, and students to determine if the objectives are being met.

Administration of Study Abroad Programs

Institutions administer study abroad programs in order to establish direct control over the development and provision of a specific kind of overseas learning experience. many different kinds of institutions operate programs, including U.S. colleges and universities, foreign universities and companies, and proprietary organizations. The types of programs and amounts of structure and support services vary tremendously. Despite the wide range, all should be administered according to the following principles.

5. The purposes and specific educational objectives of the program should be carefully developed and clearly stated in the program bulletin and promotional materials.
6. Accurate, honest, and complete information should be provided to prospective applicants describing the nature and scope of the program including its opportunities and limitations, how and where instruction will be given, the relationship if any to a foreign institution, grading practices, significant differences between a home campus experience and what can be expected abroad, information about local attitudes and mores, local living conditions, and the extent of responsibility assumed by the program for housing participants.
7. Applicants should be screened to ensure that participants have the maturity, adequate language proficiency, academic background and achievement, and motivation necessary for success in the type of program and place of study.
8. The program should include an orientation, both predeparture and ongoing, which assists participants in making appropriate personal, social, and academic adjustments. Programs maintaining centers abroad should provide counseling and supervisory services at the foreign center, with special attention to the problems peculiar to the location and nature of the program.
9. The program should encourage extensive and effective use of the unique physical, human, and cultural resources of the host environment, and the academic rigor of the program should be comparable to that at the home campus. There should be clearly defined criteria and policies for judging performance and assigning credit in accordance with prevailing standards and practices at the home institution.
10. Administrative arrangements (such as housing, transportation, and finances) and support services (such as counseling and health services) made both in the U.S. and at the program location abroad should be managed effectively by carefully selected and qualified staff who have both appropriate academic and administrative experience necessary to perform the work.
11. Programs should be evaluated periodically by student participants, program administrators, and a faculty advisory committee to determine the extent to which objectives and purposes are being met. Changes should be made in light of the findings.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND ORIENTATION PROGRAMS IN THE UNITED STATES

ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND ORIENTATION PROGRAMS IN THE UNITED STATES (ELOPUS) is the most complete information resource on preacademic English as a Second Language (ESL) programs that prepare foreign nationals for U.S. study.

Long the standard reference directory in U.S. educational advising centers overseas, ELOPUS provides essential information for the foreign student and academic adviser—including data on housing, orientation, services, TOEFL requirements and visa sponsorship. Over 750 entries contain detailed data on course offerings, duration, costs, eligibility and instruction.

ELOPUS describes intensive ESL programs and ESL courses offered by accredited U.S. colleges and universities and other organizations. The book also contains a special section on ESL at private secondary schools.

An especially useful new feature: a complete index of starting-dates for intensive ESL programs organized by program length—a feature of great value to academic advisers.

The Institute of International Education (IIE), the largest U.S. higher educational exchange agency, has provided information on international educational exchange to higher education and the public for 70 years. IIE is a nonprofit organization with over 550 member U.S. colleges and universities.

To order additional copies of ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND ORIENTATION PROGRAMS IN THE UNITED STATES, or to purchase other IIE publications on international study, fill out the enclosed order form. Check with IIE for the price of subsequent editions.
